Q&A

Donny Osmond

The singer, 57, is celebrating his 50th year in the business.

What's the secret to a lasting career?

You can't just rest on your laurels. I'm online all the time watching the trends. I wish I'd had Facebook and Twitter back in the "Puppy Love" days.

How did you choose the songs you cover on The Soundtrack of My Life?

[Michael Jackson's "Ben"] was originally written for me. And Elton John's "Your Song" was playing when I looked over at [Debbie, my wife of 36 years] and thought, "I'm gonna marry that girl."

Are any of your five sons performers?

So far no, because they saw how tough the business is!

Editor's Letter

Winning Actors

Let's be honest. We've seen many entertainers accept awards with a little too much enthusiasm. The tears, the heavy breathing, the shock—you feel like reminding them the award is for acting, not resolving geopolitical conflict. But there is something special about the Screen Actors Guild Awards. Even the most decorated movie stars are genuinely moved to be honored by their peers and recognized by the union that has played such a pivotal role in their lives. On Jan. 25 the 21st Annual SAG Awards were handed out at Los Angeles's Shrine Exposition Center (and broadcast live on TNT and TBS), and as always PEOPLE was there to help celebrate, throwing a post-ceremony gala with the Entertainment Industry Foundation. In this issue and on People.com, you'll find exclusive photos from our bash, where we toasted the winners and nominees. Many thanks to our sponsors, L'Oréal Paris and Dunkin' Donuts. I particularly enjoyed the coffee and Munchkins provided for the ride home. For me that was the best treat of the night—next to watching Viola Davis win a prize.

Congratulating Julia Roberts, nominated for HBO's The Normal Heart (with DreamWorks Animation exec Chip Sullivan looking on); Viola Davis, who won for How to Get Away with Murder, with Maggie Gyllenhaal at the PEOPLE/EIF gala.

Jennifer Lopez

Jennifer Lopez has always taken the criticism directed at her with grace, and she has never seemed to get involved in partying. I don't think she's the most talented actress, singer or dancer, but she worked hard enough to be successful at all three. That's pretty impressive.
Jen via people.com

She exemplifies all the beauty and class of a hardworking woman and mother. She deserves nothing less than a man who will appreciate all of her devotion to her kids and her career!
Heather Morningstar Hagerstown, Md.

Jessica Chastain

A Most Violent Year is fantastic! She and Oscar Isaac should have been nominated for Academy Awards.

Madison Holleran Suicide

If you break a leg on a weekend you can go to an ER and see a doctor who will treat you immediately. A depressed person, like Madison, admits to depression and suicidal thoughts on a weekend and is told she can't get an appointment for treatment until Monday. Her death is one too many in a country that has the capability to figure out a better way to help those who are depressed before it's too late.
Casey O'Malley Baldwinsvillle, N.Y.

My admiration and gratitude goes to the Holleran family for being so open about a very personal, stigmatized topic. Madison's story encouraged me to seek help I'd never before had the courage to admit I needed. I hope the Hollerans know that their special girl continues to bring happiness into this world and that by opening up an honest dialogue about mental health, they will undoubtedly save lives.
Christina Green Huntsville, Ala.

Larry Wilmore

This man is six kinds of hilarious. Wilmore will soon make me forget that a person named Stephen Colbert even existed.

Correction In this week's Great Ideas' Roast Chicken recipe (page 110) you should use 12 potatoes , shallots and carrots (we incorrectly listed the amount as 6). In the Feb. 2 Puzzler, 38 Across could not be filled in correctly. The correct answer is "alpo." PEOPLE regrets the errors.

People UPDATE

Homeless to Higher Education

In our July 7, 2014, issue we shared the story of homeless youth James Ward, 20, and his mentor Jessica Sutherland, 35. Ward enrolled in Howard University with guidance from Sutherland and proceeds from her social media campaign. Since then their nonprofit, Homeless to Higher Ed, has taken on two more displaced clients. One, Shelly D., 22, suffers from a congenital disorder and panhandles to help cover expenses not covered by her tuition grant at a community college in San Francisco. With Sutherland's help, Shelly, who wants to become a medical researcher, also receives funds for living expenses. "The goal is to get her in an apartment so she has some stability," says Sutherland. "It's amazing that she gets decent grades when she doesn't have somewhere to live."

ON THE RISE
"This program has given me hope that even in the darkest of situations you will find a light," says Shelly (near right) with Sutherland.

The Modern Family star hit the red carpet with the perfect dress and one hot date

FLASH MOB
The red carpet "is fun, but it's not going to last forever," says Vergara (with fiancé Joe Manganiello). "I make sure to enjoy it every time."

SOFIA'S CHOICE
"I wear [form fitting] because when you have boobs, you look weird in something baggy," she explains. "It doesn't lay flat, and then you look pregnant!"

BEAUTY & THE BLING
Vergara wore jewelry from her Kay Jewelers line. "I picked this blue topaz with diamond earrings and a bracelet that I loved."

RED-HOT READY
Vergara chose her Donna Karan Atelier gown because of the vibrant color. "Joe loved it," she says. "I showed him my options and he helped me pick."

POWER LUNCH
"We like to relax and I order food for everybody," says Vergara, who ate a chicken panini and salad (right). "We always like to take our time."

INTO THE NIGHT
After the ceremony the couple hit the PEOPLE/EIF-hosted SAG Awards Gala, where "there's great food and drinks and Modern Family always has a table," Vergara says. "You try to make the night memorable."

In her divorce petition, Jillian (with Dempsey in 2014) filed for joint legal and physical custody of the couple's three children.

PATRICK DEMPSEY
INSIDE HIS SURPRISE SPLIT

BY AILI NAHAS

AS PATRICK DEMPSEY geared up for the Rolex 24 Daytona on Jan. 24, he was focused but subdued. "He didn't sign autographs like he usually does," says a racing source. "He kept a lower profile than usual." The day before, Dempsey and his wife, Jillian, had announced they were divorcing after 15 years. "It is with careful consideration and mutual respect that we have decided to end our marriage," the couple told PEOPLE in an exclusive statement. "Our primary concern remains the well-being of our children, and we ask with profound gratitude that you respect our family's privacy at this very sensitive time."

Admirers of the Grey's Anatomy star and his makeup artist wife, whose longevity seemed a foregone conclusion, were shocked. But those in the couple's inner circle were less so. "It's been a long time coming," says a source close to the → family, noting that the pair had discussed divorce. Dempsey, who was married to his manager Rocky Parker for seven years, met Jillian at her hair salon. They wed in 1999 and now have three children—Talula, 12, and twins Darby and Sullivan, 8. "They've forged this alliance that can take on all," Dempsey's Sweet Home Alabama director Andy Tennant once said of the couple.

So why did their relationship take a bad turn? The actor's hectic schedule and the couple's divergent interests seem to be the culprits. "They have lived separate lives for years," adds the source close to the family. "They are involved in the children's lives but separately. Patrick and Jillian have had disagreements for a long time. Emotionally, for Jillian, something was missing." Dempsey, who splits his time between his work on Grey's and his passion for professional race-car driving, has admitted to the toll his commitments have taken on his personal life. "It would be nice . . . not to be spread so thin," Dempsey told the Associated Press shortly before the divorce was announced. Their personalities—he is outgoing and charming while she is more reserved—"could not have been more opposite," adds another source.

'[THE SPLIT] HAS BEEN A LONG TIME COMING. . . . THEY HAVE LIVED SEPARATE LIVES FOR YEARS'
—A SOURCE CLOSE TO THE FAMILY

Still, despite their troubles, divorce was a last resort for Dempsey. "He was married and divorced before, and he has said he never wanted a divorce again because of his kids," says the source close to the family. The actor hopes that the future will bring about renewed harmony. "I think where I'm going," he told the AP, "is to really streamline and be much more specific in balancing things a little bit better than I have in the past."

Happier times: Moore and Adams in L.A. in 2012.

MANDY MOORE & RYAN ADAMS
CALLING IT QUITS

Just hours after news broke that Mandy Moore and husband Ryan Adams had split, Adams appeared on The Late Late Show in a pretaped performance of his song "Gimme Something Good." With its somber lyrics, the track fit the sad occasion. "It is a respectful, amicable parting of ways," the couple said in a statement to PEOPLE. Per court documents, the pair—who wed in March 2009—had separated in August, five months before Adams, 40, filed for divorce. Moore, 30, who contributed to Adams's album last year, seemed to flick at the upheaval days before the announcement, posting a photo on Instagram about Mercury being in retrograde. "Messages received," she wrote in the caption, adding the hashtags "thatexplainsit" and "theworst."

RYAN GUZMAN

The actor, 27, is hot off a successful opening weekend of The Boy Next Door, in which he plays the seductive—and obsessive—neighbor of Jennifer Lopez. While they sizzled onscreen, their spark didn't exactly continue once the cameras stopped rolling. WORD ASSOCIATION WITH WENDY WILLIAMS

THE TALK SHOW DIVA, 50, WHO CELEBRATED HER 1,000TH EPISODE OF THE WENDY WILLIAMS SHOW ON JAN. 30, FREE-ASSOCIATES:

Gossip
Wendy. Hot Topics is my favorite part of the show, and it's a positive thing. Listen, gossip is an icebreaker for anybody who might be too shy to walk into a room and own it themselves.

Sex
Glow. You can tell who's having sex and who isn't based on their glow. There's an aura. Look at that Jennifer Lopez, she's glowing!

Winter
Jersey. The whole tristate area with its doom and gloom, ice, shoveling and power outages. It's a mess, but I wouldn't have it any other way.

Favorite
Candy. I love it! I'm a member of a candy-of-the-month club. Poor is the adult who lets go of their inner child.

Secret
Keep it. Believe it or not, I'm a good secret keeper. It might not seem that way because of my TV personality, but in real life my mouth is a steel trap.

Fun
Me. Because I love to have it. I'm actually going out to a club tonight to celebrate with some old radio friends. But I'll still be up early in the morning trying to give a good show.

CRESSIDA BONAS

LIFE AFTER PRINCE HARRY

In Tulip Fever, Bonas plays the young wife of a merchant.

What's a prince's ex-girlfriend to do when her fairy-tale ending doesn't come true? If she's Cressida Bonas, she'll dive right into work. Ever since her on-again, off-again romance with Prince Harry ended, the blue-blooded Bonas, 25, has been showing up on the London and Los Angeles party scenes. In L.A. for Golden Globes weekend, she chatted up Downton Abbey stars Joanne Froggatt and Laura Carmichael and mingled with Keira Knightley and Eddie Redmayne at the BAFTA tea party. Call it professional networking: The trained dancer and rookie actress has some big projects ahead including a couple of London theater productions and as muse to Mulberry, the British fashion brand. She has also landed her first film role, courtesy of Harvey Weinstein, in Tulip Fever, which boasts a starry cast headed by Dame Judi Dench. Bonas "has decided to throw herself into her work and is reaping extraordinary rewards," says Ingrid Seward, editor of Majesty magazine. Her relationship with Harry certainly gave her career a boost, but Weinstein also credits her talent and drive: Her part in Tulip Fever, he told the Evening Standard, is the "first of many roles for her." But she just won't play the princess.

—BY SIMON PERRY AND MONIQUE JESSEN

"She is doing what she wants to do and is free," Seward says. A royal family friend says, "She certainly didn't [date Harry] in order to become famous."

VIRAL HIT OF THE WEEK

The Mystery of the Toy Unwrapper

She's the No. 1 YouTube destination for adults and children looking for the vicarious thrill of unboxing a new toy—and she's completely anonymous. DC Toys Collector joined YouTube in 2011 and has racked up more than 3.5 million subscribers, topped Tubefilter's most-watched channel chart and earned an estimated $409,000 in the past 30 days, according to OpenSlate, a video analytics platform. She's not alone: Unboxing video uploads jumped 57 percent in 2014, says YouTube rep Zayna Aston. How long would it take to watch all of 2014's unboxing uploads? "Seven years!" says Aston.

The outbreak probably started in December at Disneyland.

Measles Fears Grow

An outbreak has spread to 7 states, with more than 80 diagnosed cases

What is the cause of the outbreak? A Disneyland visitor who had not received both doses of the measles-containing vaccine is the likely source of the highly contagious disease, infectious disease experts say.
How much protection does the vaccine provide? About 85% of people with the first dose and 98–99% of those who got the second dose vaccine will be protected, says Dr. Jennifer Lighter-Fisher of NYU's Langone Medical Center. Children less than a year old who haven't had the vaccine yet are especially vulnerable.
Why has this outbreak focused attention on parents who don't vaccinate? "This is definitely the result of the antivaccine movement," says Dr. Paul Offit of Children's Hospital of Philadelphia. "We have a disease that is preventable. Why should children suffer?"

PERSONAL STORIES ABOUT GIVING BACK

Kelly Clarkson

The 'Heartbeat Song' crooner, 32, uses her voice to help lift patients' spirits

Clarkson visits a Nashville children's hospital.

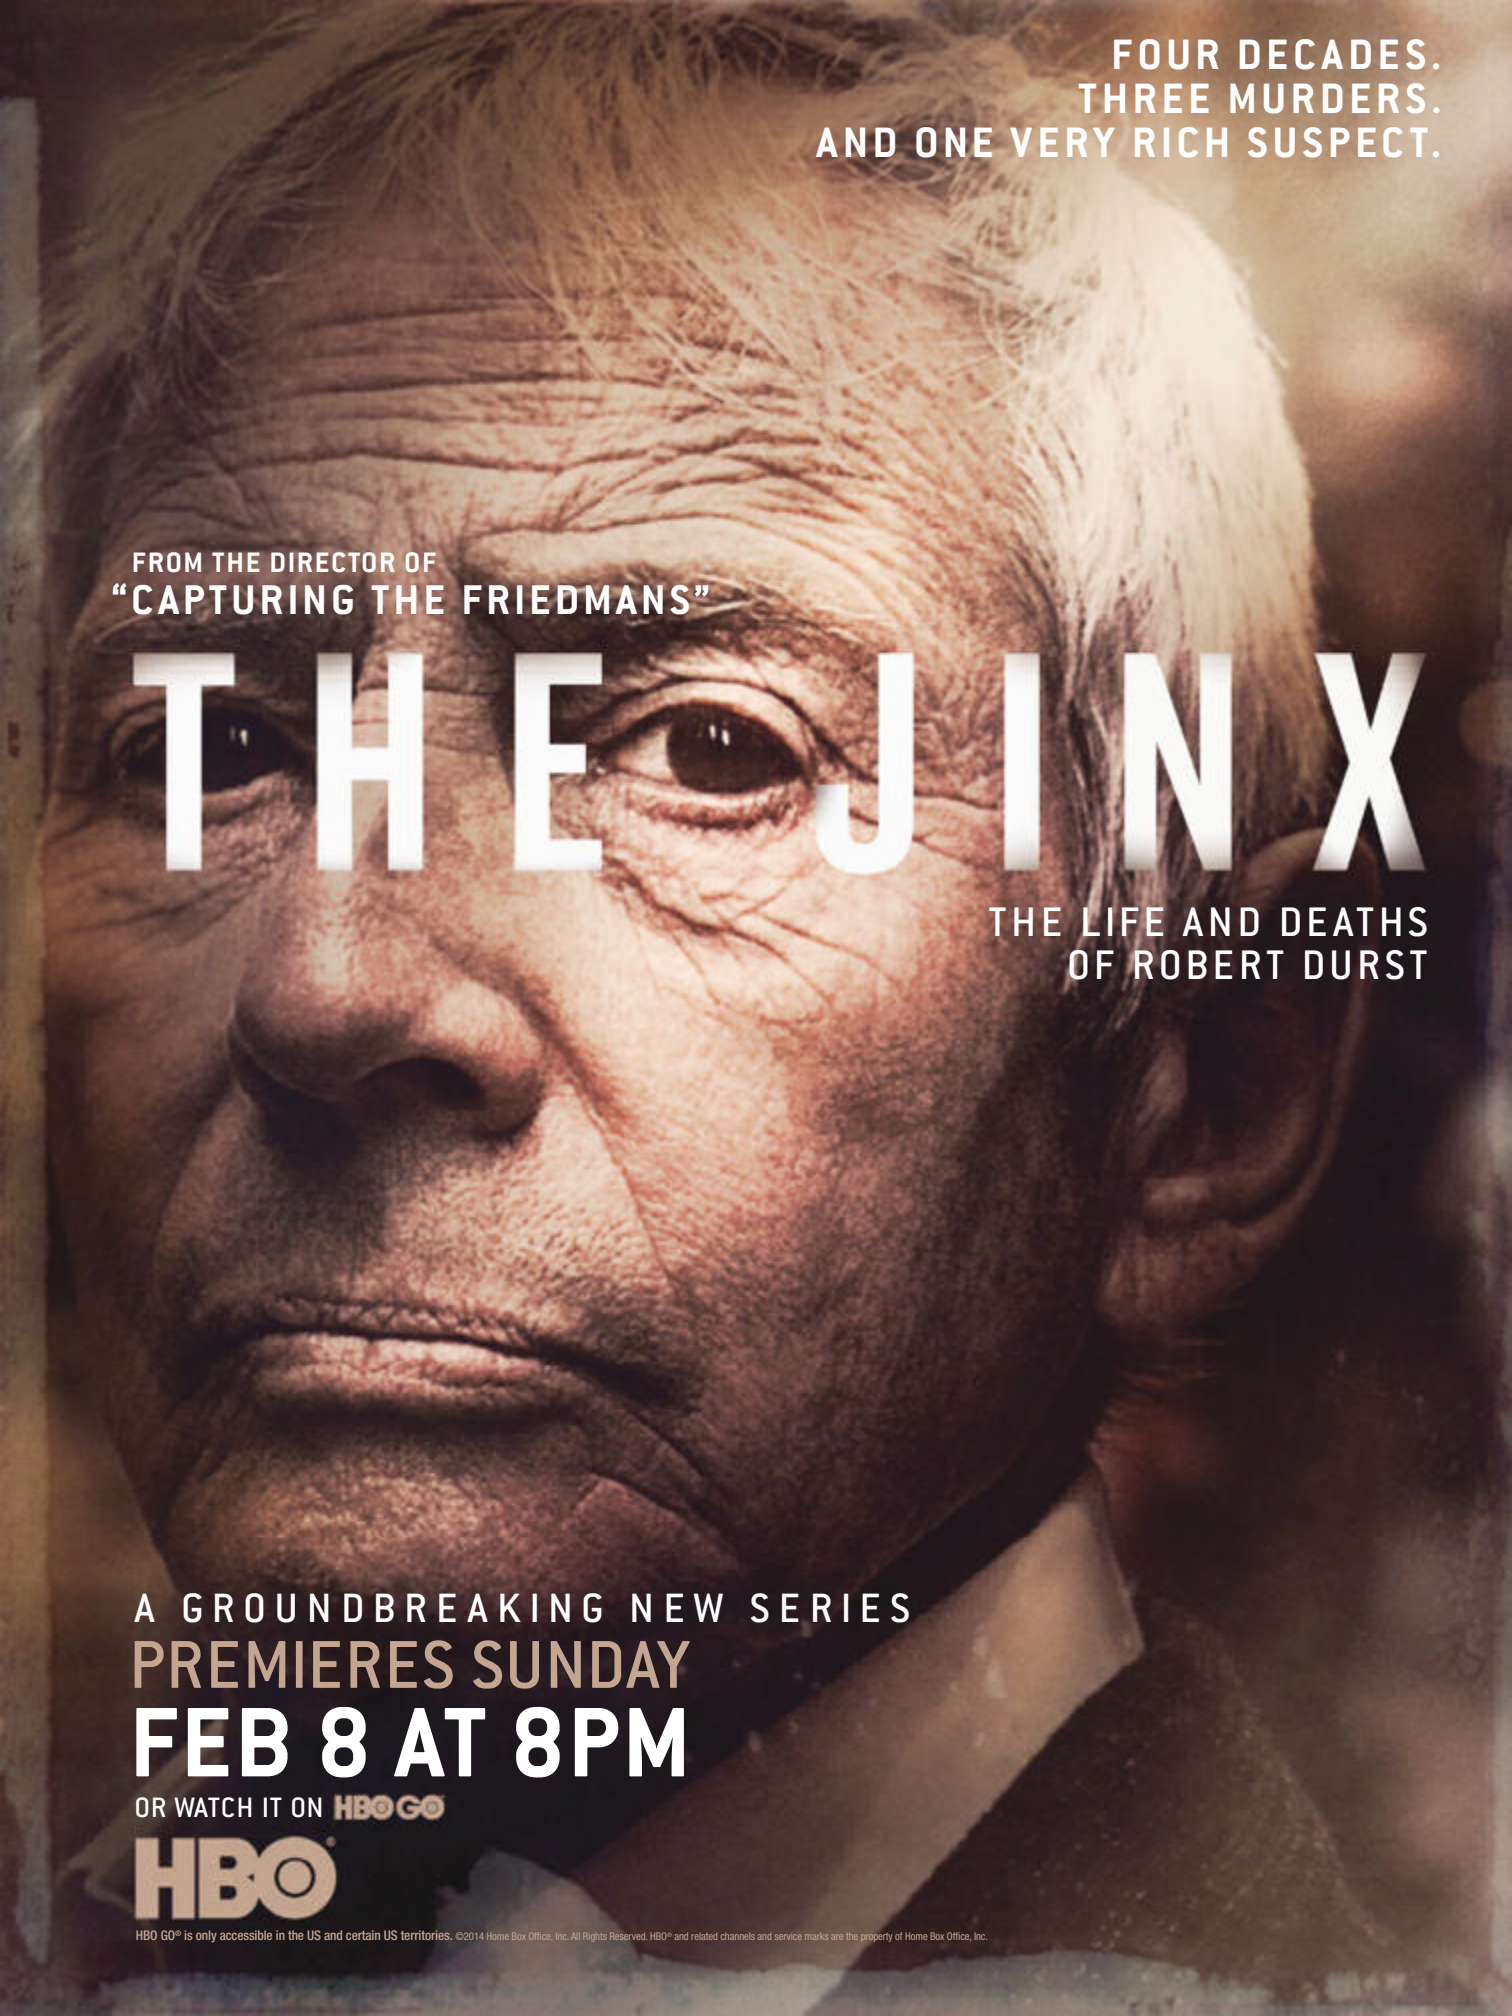

I used to go to hospitals and just sing because I love kids, and I love singing. When my friend said that he works with this group called Musicians on Call, I had to go find out what it was about. So I met them, and I now go [as part of MOC to visit patients] at Christmastime. I love it because the music is just such a nostalgic thing. We do a mini Christmas show for them, and then my guitarist and I go around to each room singing to the kids who can't come see the performance. Music has such an influence on our emotions, and it aids in recovery. It's powerful. It's kind of a healthy little elixir for everyone. And I can relate to it: I was very much an outsider as a kid, and music kind of saved me. I'm considerably blessed in my life. I'm married now, I have three kids [baby River, 7 months, and stepkids Savannah, 13, and Seth, 8] and my career and everything—it's awesome. My life couldn't be better. But you just pause and go, "Why wouldn't you want to give back? Why wouldn't you want to help out when you have so much spotlight to share?"

Viola Davis (with Liza Weil) as the superlawyer in a megamess.

MITCH HAASETH/ABC

No. 1 How to Get Away with Murder

Viola Davis and her fast-scrambling team are learning that homicide is bloody difficult

TV DRAMA The second half of the season picks up shortly after the events of the winter finale, only this time Annalise Keating (Viola Davis) is putting on her face as opposed to taking it off. (Just as powerful a moment, by the way.) Answers are quickly revealed: We find out if Annalise and Wes (Alfred Enoch) are in cahoots; whether Sam (Tom Verica) impregnated Lila and killed her; and how Keating's team handles the stress of Sam's murder. Just when everything seems to be wrapping up, Marcia Gay Harden appears in the final seconds as Sam's sister Hannah—Joan Crawford to Viola Davis's Bette Davis. If one can be allowed a riff on the immortal words of the Baha Men: Who let the claws out? (ABC, Thursdays, 10 p.m.)

No. 2 The People Channel on Snapchat

MOBILE

People's lively, one-of-a-kind entertainment and celebrity coverage now has even more on-the-go fun and buzz: We're on Snapchat's new mobile platform, Discover, along with CNN, Food Network, Comedy Central and more. Daily editions will feature up to 10 "Snaps"—photos, stories and videos. (Available for free download Jan. 27.)

Hudson Yang (leaning on table) is Eddie, adjusting to a wildly different new home.

No. 3 Fresh Off the Boat

For an Asian-American kid, it's a new wave of life

TV COMEDY Boat, loosely based on chef Eddie Huang's memoir, is another good addition to ABC's roster of family-oriented sitcoms. Young Eddie, his siblings and their parents have moved from Washington, D.C., to Orlando, where Eddie's Taiwan-born father has the dream of running a western-style steakhouse. The gags are gentle but solid, and Dad is played with squishy-soft kindness by Randall Park, at the moment better known as Kim Jong-un in The Interview. (ABC, Feb. 4, 8:30 p.m.)

No. 4 2CELLOS, Celloverse

MUSIC CROSSOVER

Croatian cellists Luka Sulic and Stjepan Hauser, whose instrumental version of Michael Jackson's "Smooth Criminal" made them a YouTube smash, launch their new album with Rossini's "William Tell Overture"—then tear into Iron Maiden's "The Trooper." They have a sense of humor, but they don't kid around: It requires a fierce attack to saw into "Live and Let Die" (with classical pianist Lang Lang). A few tracks are woodsy and mellow. Most will make you shake like cjello.

Scott Cohen and Hope Davis as Mr. and Mrs. Spy.

No. 5 Allegiance

TV DRAMA This isn't on a par with FX's family-of-spies thriller The Americans—it doesn't have the grit—but it deserves a chance because of several terrific actors: Hope Davis, as a mother who mistakenly thought she was done spying for Russia, and Morgan Spector, mackerel-oily as a mean foreign operative. As Davis's son, a rising CIA star, Gavin Stenhouse has Nikolaj Coster-Waldau's nose and Johnny Depp's face. Nice combo. (NBC, Feb. 5, 10 p.m.)

No. 6 The Nightly Show with Larry Wilmore

From headlines to punch lines

TV COMEDY Wilmore, who once held the official title of senior black correspondent on Jon Stewart's The Daily Show, replaces The Colbert Report with his own half-hour news satire. He doesn't try for Stewart's ironic send-up of anchorman posturing or Colbert's merry, mock-pundit performance. His jokes follow their own strange, logical line: He's Harold with the magic crayon. And he's funny. No one else has done a dead-on impersonation of Bill Cosby talking about Grover Cleveland. Who else ever will? (Comedy Central, weeknights, 11:30 p.m.)

Rob Lowe and Paz Vega in a racy tale of S&M—and $.

No. 8 Beautiful & Twisted

Rob Lowe plays a hotel heir whose wife checks out his fortune, then checks him out of existence.

TV DRAMA Rob Lowe, the Michael Douglas of Lifetime true-crime movies, plays Miami hotel heir Ben Novack Jr., a rich if scrofulous sap whose taste for sadistic kink found fulfillment with his 1991 marriage to a fortune-hunting stripper named Narcy (Paz Vega). Mrs. Novack, who's shown in this tastily nasty drama knocking out light fixtures with a crack of her whip, was the truly depraved one. She had both Novack and his socialite mother (Candice Bergen) bumped off. Lowe, narrating from the afterlife, describes this fatal relationship as a kind of love story. And you believe him: The heart wants what it wants, even if it's heartless. (Lifetime, Jan. 31, 8 p.m.)

No. 9 Ryan Bingham, Fear and Saturday Night

MUSIC FOLK Bingham, 33, sings in a gritty rasp from the vantage of a rocky, rocky life (his mom died of alcoholism and his dad committed suicide). The man has seen and endured more than most people twice his age.

The Oscar and Grammy winner (he cowrote Crazy Heart's theme, "The Weary Kind") pours his soul into this harmonica-accented collection, especially on tracks like "Broken Heart Tattoos."

No. 10 The Best New Books

A searing divorce memoir and two delightful novels about ambitious young women finding their way EDITED BY KIM HUBBARD

BOOK OF THE WEEK

Michael Callahan Searching for Grace Kelly

FICTION Set in 1955, Searching follows three young women seeking their fortunes—and true love—in the big city. Laura's a summer "guest editor," Dolly's in secretarial school and gorgeous Vivian sells cigarettes at the Stork Club while longing to sing. Sparkling with the glamour of 1950s New York, Callahan's debut is a delight.

Alexandra Fuller Leaving Before the Rains Come

MEMOIR After writing unforgettable memoirs about her charmingly eccentric African upbringing, Fuller chronicles the doomed marriage that turned her into a quasi-American. This gorgeously written march toward divorce is a doozy: She sought a tame, stable life and then fought it off like a caged (and crazed) lioness.

Nick Hornby Funny Girl

FICTION Barbara looks like Marilyn Monroe, but she wants to be Lucille Ball. In this light, fond, funny tale by the author of About a Boy, she gets her wish: Changing her name to Sophie Straw, the feisty young nobody from an English backwater becomes an overnight TV star in a '60s London that is just shaking off the deprivations of the postwar period. Sophie is a charmer, and so is this fizzy delight about the likable oddballs who populate showbiz.

No. 11 Sundance Film Festival

Sex, Scientology and a sweet comedy are what everyone's talking about

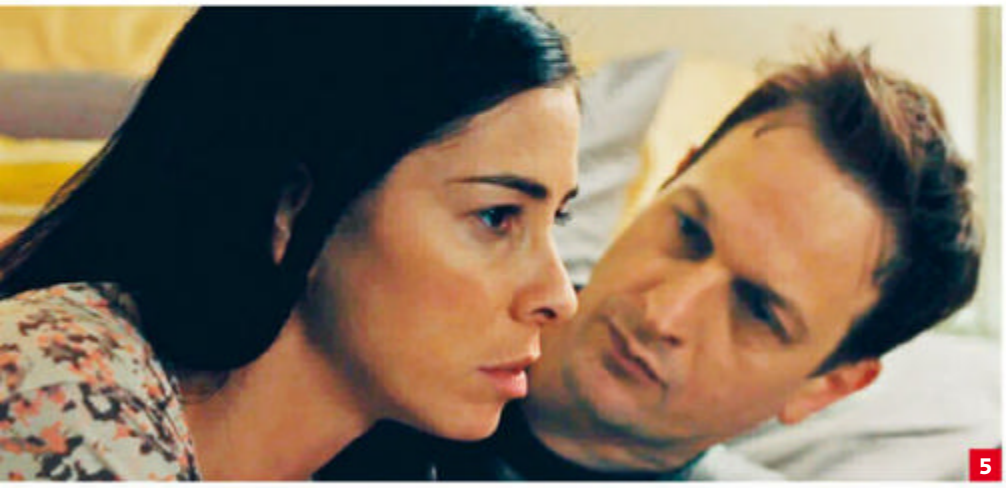

MOVIES You don't have to hit the ski slopes in Park City, Utah, for wild thrills. This year's buzziest films took huge risks, as Jason Segel and Sarah Silverman played wildly against type.

1. It was a standing "O" for Me and Earl and the Dying Girl, an offbeat comedy (with Nick Offerman in the cast) about a boy befriending a terminally ill classmate. 2. The Overnight has Adam Scott, Taylor Schilling and startling male nudity. 3. The D Train is an edgy bromance with Jack Black and James Marsden. 4. Documentary Going Clear: Scientology and the Prison of Belief features ex-members and plenty of controversy. 5. In I Smile Back, Silverman shows serious chops as an addict mom (Josh Charles is her spouse). 6. The Bronze stars Melissa Rauch (The Big Bang Theory) as a twisted gymnast. 7. The Witch (with Anya Taylor-Joy) could be a breakout horror hit. 8. And Segel (with Jesse Eisenberg) is getting raves as writer David Foster Wallace in The End of the Tour.

No. 12 The Grammy Awards

TV To predict this year's winners, PEOPLE tapped Johnny Avello—the executive director of Race and Sports at the Wynn Las Vegas—to name the sure bets. "I follow music and talk to contacts in the business to decide who is the top choice to win," says Avello, who admits that there are always upsets. Cue 2011's surprise Best New Artist winner Esperanza Spalding: "Some things come out of left field!"

Record of the Year

NOMINEES: Iggy Azalea, "Fancy"; Sia, "Chandelier"; Sam Smith, "Stay with Me"; Taylor Swift, "Shake It Off"; Meghan Trainor, "All About That Bass"

WINNER: Sam Smith

Maybe it's the luck of the English? Like his soul predecessors Adele and Amy Winehouse, Smith is poised to walk away with Record and Song of the Year.

Song of the Year

NOMINEES: Meghan Trainor, "All About That Bass"; Sia, "Chandelier"; Taylor Swift, "Shake It Off"; Sam Smith, "Stay with Me"; Hozier, "Take Me to Church"

WINNER: Sam Smith

Hozier and Sia are the closest runners-up to Smith, who is the odds-on favorite. If he wins, he'd be the 16th artist to snag the two top prizes.

Album of the Year

NOMINEES: Beck, Morning Phase; Beyoncé, Beyoncé; Ed Sheeran, X; Sam Smith, In the Lonely Hour; Pharrell Williams, Girl

WINNER: Beyoncé

Expect Mrs. Carter, who opened last year's show with husband Jay Z, to win for her game-changing, universally lauded effort (especially since she got snubbed for Record and Song!).

Best New Artist

NOMINEES: Iggy Azalea, Bastille, Brandy Clark, Haim, Sam Smith

WINNER: Sam Smith

With six nominations in total, Smith bested veterans (besides Beyoncé and Pharrell, who tied his count) and fellow newbies. Says Avello: "I don't see anybody beating him."

"Sit back and listen to this one, guys. It'll blow your mind," he said. Years later, when I was admonished for writing lyrics deemed "too stream of consciousness," I thought of that car ride and my dad's giddiness. And Bob Dylan's voice, which I imagined, in the face of these attempts to shut my style of writing down, saying, "Sounds good to me, Alanis."

'I Will Love Him

Chris Kyle's wife opens up about the real man behind the movie—and her life without him

Until the Day I Die'

During his four tours of duty in Iraq, Navy SEAL Chris Kyle was away from home for months at a time. But even after he quit the military in 2009 to prioritize his family, leaving them just for a night or two still hurt. His wife, Taya Kyle, remembers how their young daughter had tears in her eyes after he set off for an overnight trip in early 2013. "She said, 'I know Daddy has to work, and I know he's coming back, but I just miss him already,'" recalls Taya. When she spoke with him by phone and shared that their daughter had been upset to show how much she loved being with him, "He said, 'I feel like I just got kicked in the stomach.' He asked if he could talk to her. His friend told me later that he leaned against the wall and bent down to his knees and held the bridge of his nose with tears in his eyes. He loved his kids so much."

'One of the lines in our wedding vows was "I will

Her husband would become known around the world as the most lethal sniper in U.S. history, but for Taya he was just Chris, the dad who made their two children giggle at the dinner table. The husband who hugged her every morning and stayed up late watching TV and eating junk food in bed. The Texan who liked to tease her about being a "Yankee." (She's from Oregon.) "He was the biggest kid," says Taya, 40, sitting on a patio in north Texas as she pets her beloved German shepherd, V. "I miss those family dinners where we would joke with the kids. I miss the way he laughed at the littlest things with me and the way the kids and I couldn't wait for him to come home from work. I miss how Chris changed the feeling in the room when he was in it."

Now he's changing the national conversation. Two years after Chris's death on a Texas gun range at age 38, his story is resonating with moviegoers, who have made American Sniper, the film starring Bradley Cooper based on Chris's bestselling 2012 autobiography, a $200 million box office smash. With its intimate look at a military marriage—and Chris's struggle to find his way back to his loved ones even after he'd left the battlefield far behind—Sniper has focused attention on the challenges faced by the families of those who serve. "Chris would be in awe of it," Taya says of the success of the film, which scored six Oscar nominations and has drawn an overwhelming response from veterans' groups (see box). "It makes me emotional when I think about how he would react, because I want him here. At the same time, I can see him being uncomfortable with all the attention."

Theirs was a marriage tested like few others: While Chris served in some of the world's most dangerous war zones for the better part of eight years, Taya feared for his safety every day—especially after insurgents had placed a bounty on his head—and always wondered if he would make it home for the next Christmas. "I had so much practice of being afraid Chris was dead, hearing the gunfights on the phone when I called him overseas," says Taya, whose own book, American Wife, is due in May. "We had our moments where I felt like we were less important than the military and he felt like I didn't understand his sense of duty."

Still, it wasn't until he left the military and came home for good in 2009 that their relationship began to crack under the strain of what he had endured. "The war hardened his soul in different ways," she says. "There were times we did not think we were going to make it."

The life of a military wife is not something Taya had ever imagined for herself. When they first met at a San Diego bar in 2001, she was a career-minded pharmaceutical sales rep and he was an ex-rodeo rider turned Navy SEAL. When she told him she would never marry a SEAL because she thought they were "arrogant and self-centered, he said, 'I would die for my country. How is that self-centered?'" As in the film, he held her hair after she became sick from drinking. "He was kind and protective from day one," she says. Then at closing time, "I was pushed into him, and my hands hit his stomach, and they were really strong abs, and I thought, 'Oh!'" she says with a laugh.

Although they were opposites in many ways—"I was a fast talker; he was a slow talker," she says—they found common ground in their mutual sense of humor and shared family values. "We were made for each other in ways we wouldn't ever have known," says Taya. Almost a year after their first date, they exchanged self-written vows on a boat in Newport Beach, Calif., before 40 family members and friends. "One of the lines in our wedding vows was, 'I will remind you who you are when you forget,'" says Taya. "He wrote, 'All of me,' in my ring, and mine to him says, 'My love, my life.'"

Soon after they wed, Chris was deployed to Iraq. "In the beginning I understood," she says. "He would write me the most romantic e-mails, saying, 'I just want to be home with you.'"

But as the years wore on—with Chris steadily building his reputation as "the Legend" for his 160 confirmed kills—the strain of his absence began to take its toll. "When he was home, he knew there were people dying over there who he thought he could save," says Sienna Miller, who became close with Taya while she prepared to play her in the film. "That is a really impossible dilemma to face."

During one of his last visits home, "I said, 'I could move to Oregon to be with my family, and I would see you just as much as I do now,'" says Taya, adding that she didn't want him to quit: "I just wanted out of that cycle of constant combat."

When he did finally leave the military in 2009, "I thought it would be like it was between his deployments, we would laugh and have fun." But the family life she craved and the reality of his coming off the battlefield were very different. "What I didn't account for was the really hard transition for these guys during that first year or two," she says. "Chris had always dreamed of being a cowboy and being a military guy. And once he did both of those things, he was like, 'What's the next dream?' And there wasn't one. I didn't understand the depth of pain he felt."

American Sniper screenwriter Jason Hall, who worked closely with Chris prior to his death, says the pain was evident. "He was back from war, but he didn't feel like he was all the way home," says Hall. "I sensed a real heaviness to him, which is haunting when you know what he had to deal with, which is taking a lot of lives."

While Taya won't say outright that Chris struggled with PTSD—"I don't ever want to put that label on him, because he never said it publicly, and I want to honor what he wanted to share"—there is no question that he wrestled with the aftereffects of war. "It's what a lot of guys struggle with," she says. "It's missing the brotherhood, because that is something you can't get anywhere else in life, where your coworkers will die for you. There were so many things, and that manifested in sleepless nights and a detachment you see in the movie."

It wasn't until he began to help other veterans cope that he was able to reclaim his purpose. "In so many ways, helping veterans is how Chris came back to his family," says Rick Kell, cofounder of Troops First, a group that Chris worked with closely. Whether hunting with them or knocking back a beer, "he wanted to talk about the things that were on their minds."

Bradley Cooper's 'Life-Changing' Role

Bradley Cooper has worked with the USO for eight years, but his starring role in American Sniper has made the cause even more personal. "It's been life-changing," Cooper, who is up for a Best Actor Oscar, tells PEOPLE. "I think I had an appreciation for veterans before this, but what I definitely did not know is the toll that it takes on the family." In visits with veterans, "they say, 'Thank you for putting a guy I can relate to up there.'" Leaders of several veterans groups say the same. "The film gets it—not just Chris's story but Taya's too," says Paul Rieckhoff of IAVA, adding that Cooper, whom he has known for several years, "is a real dude and a deeply committed activist." Notes Rick Kell, cofounder of Troops First: "There's an overwhelming appreciation for the film telling what it's really like once these warriors get home." Cooper returns the gratitude. "It's not lost on me that the freedom I have is because we live in a country where there is a volunteer military," he says, "who chooses to sacrifice their lives to defend our life, liberty and pursuit of happiness."

A month before he died, Taya says she finally felt like the man she married had come back to her. "In the scene where Sienna says, 'I'm just so proud of you,' that is true. I said to him, 'I really want to tell you that I get how hard this was. You fought your way back. I'm so in awe of the father you are and the husband you are.' Looking back, I'm so glad I got the chance to tell him that."

The day he died—Feb. 2, 2013—"was like a lot of our Saturdays," she says. "We went to the kids' sporting events. I was going to take my daughter to Build-a-Bear." They made a plan to meet up later after Chris and a friend, Chad Littlefield, visited a nearby gun range with 25-year-old former Marine Eddie Ray Routh, whose mom had asked for Chris's help. Hours later a police officer appeared at Taya's door to tell her that both Chris and Chad had been fatally shot, with Routh under arrest for the killings. (His murder trial is set for Feb. 11; see box.) "I leaned against the wall with tears pouring down my face and said, 'Is there any way you're wrong?'" Sitting on her front lawn with a child on each knee, she faced the hardest moment of her life. "I said, 'Something really bad has happened.' The tears just poured out."

'The major source of my strength is my faith and my love for my children and Chris'

The Accused

Chris Kyle was trying to help a troubled fellow veteran when he took Eddie Ray Routh, 25, to a Texas gun range on Feb. 2, 2013, to help him cope with his alleged PTSD. Instead, authorities say Routh turned the gun on Kyle and his friend Chad Littlefield. His murder trial begins Feb. 11. Prosecutors have waived the death penalty, and Routh "will plead not guilty by reason of insanity," says his lawyer J. Warren St. John. But the success of American Sniper will pose problems for a fair trial, says St. John: "The movie will be an issue."

Today, the kids are thriving and "we talk about their dad every day," she says. "It just comes up—something funny he did or his favorite color. We ask Jesus to give him a big bear hug because it makes us laugh to think Chris is like, 'Oh man!'" Still, she admits, "bedtimes are hard for me, and I am almost too tired to make it happen on time. Chris was good about that."

Hoping to help others facing similar challenges, Taya created the Chris Kyle Frog Foundation to enrich and strengthen military marriages. She is grateful that the movie is helping too: "I can't think of a better blessing." She hopes to attend the Oscars on Feb. 22 but knows that even if the film wins, it will be bittersweet. "When I actually think about what it would be like to have Chris next to me, with my hand in his, it hurts," she says. "But he's still with me. I will love him until the day I die." ●

Kim Kardashian

BABY NUMBER 2 'CAN'T COME SOON ENOUGH!'

THE REALITY QUEEN AND KANYE WEST ARE LOVING PARENTHOOD (POTTY TRAINING INCLUDED!) AND THEY'RE 'REALLY TRYING' FOR A SIBLING FOR NORTH

Whether documenting life at home with North and Kanye—or in a fur bikini, "I'm obsessed with being on my phone," admits Kim with a laugh.

She has been busy breaking the Internet and posing in the snow in a fur bikini—and now Kim Kardashian, 34, is set to reveal a T-Mobile Super Bowl ad on Feb. 1. In an exclusive interview, the mom of 19-month-old North West chatted with PEOPLE*'s Jennifer Garcia about date night, potty training and—what else?—selfies.*

Your upcoming commercial pokes fun at your love of selfies. Your idea?
I wrote it all and directed it— kidding, wish I thought of it! I obviously love selfies, but I get why people think they're ridiculous. To me they're memories, and it's so fun to capture these times in my life. Even I take selfies a little too seriously sometimes, so it's just really poking fun at that.

So what exactly are Kim's criteria for a good selfie?
In my book (Selfish, by Rizzoli, out in May) I picked from thousands of images I had. I've been documenting my life with selfies for a long time—my first was in 1984. But there's nothing more gratifying than taking a gorgeous shot after you have a baby. I love that white bikini seflie. I just felt good about myself.

Speaking of babies, any recent milestones for North?
She is so smart. She is halfway potty trained, which is insane for her age. Last night she looked up at the sky and pointed and said, "Moon, Mom! Moon!" I couldn't believe she knew that. And she can throw: She took Kanye's phone and put it in the toilet and flushed it!

Are you guys hoping to have a little partner-in-crime for North?
I really hope so! We've really been trying for another kid. More kids can't come soon enough!

Have you thought about the day when North will be taking her own selfies?
I really just started using the phone with North, but thinking to the future, I hope she's strong enough to handle certain things she'll read. I even worry about that for my little sisters [Kendall, 19, and Kylie, 17] all the time, and they're not so little! But when North is old enough I'll probably be a crazy mom, and of course I'll have her password and monitor everything!

How do you and Kanye like to relax when you get some free time?
Our perfect date night is watching a movie in our theater, cooking some food and doing absolutely nothing.

What was the story behind your recent furkini Instagram post?
We were in Utah with eight couples for my best friend's birthday. We went into this fur store and there was a fur bikini and boots. I was like, "I just have to get this, but I don't know when I'm ever going to wear it!" And then Kanye was like, "Let's do a shoot in the snow!" It was so fun.

How do you handle some of the inevitable criticism that has come up?
I used to live my life where I cared about what people thought. Now I don't do anything unless I feel like it's truly "me" and I think it's cool, artsy or fun. Maybe that's some of my husband's personality rubbing off on me and encouraging me to just be who I am. ●

BEHIND THE SCENES OF KIM'S SUPER BOWL AD

Kardashian stars in a new ad promoting T-Mobile's "Data Stash" data banking program. "It really incorporated a lot of my personality," she says.

What I Know Now

FROM MOVIES TO MARRIAGE, THE OSCAR WINNER—AND DAD OF SEVEN!—SHARES WHAT HE'S LEARNED BY AILI NAHAS

"I don't believe in conventional wisdom," says Costner. "I do the projects I want to do."

Kevin Costner did not want a party to mark his 60th birthday on Jan. 18. "I feel like I've had enough attention for a lifetime," says the Oscar-winning director. "I probably said no five times." He got one anyway—"My wife didn't listen, and my oldest daughter didn't listen"—but he's not dwelling on the milestone. "If you just sit and ponder, you're going to get rolled over," he says with a laugh. "At least in my house you will!" Married since 2004 to Christine, 40, with whom he has three young children, and the father of four grown children (three from his first marriage, one from a previous relationship), the veteran star is kicking off his new decade with two new films: He's a high school track coach in McFarland, USA (out Feb. 20), and in the drama Black or White he stars as a widower fighting for custody of his granddaughter. The latter movie was a passion project for the actor, who helped finance it after studios initially balked. "Sometimes in life it would be better to let go," says Costner. "But it's not my tendency." Here, he shares more personal wisdom.

JEFF LIPSKY/CPI SYNDICATION

1. Black or White "is relevant to me and to our time," says Costner (with Jillian Estell). 2. He won Best Director and Best Picture Oscars for Dances with Wolves in 1991. 3. As a track coach in McFarland, USA. 4. In his breakout role in 1987's No Way Out. "I've gone my way," he says of his career.

Stand by your work—even when it's not perfect.

When everybody was turning on [his 1995 film] Waterworld, I still went around the world with it, and it's a beloved movie now by a lot of people. The studio had a lot of money on that film, and somebody had to stand for it. It was flawed, but almost every movie I've had has had flaws in it. My children know [when things get tough] that's the time you don't go out.

Nurture passions outside of your career.

I'm a bit of a romantic about history and making your own way. I went down the rivers that Lewis and Clark traveled. I'd take a summer off and mine for gold. My kids and I would fish, hunt. I've always been kind of out there. Movies are what I'm known for, but it's not how I actually operate in day-to-day life. I love our business. But it doesn't define me. When I don't love what I do, I won't do it.

Be mindful of our planet—and the people on it.

I'm hurt when the world is spinning wrong. My company Water Planet Engineering is looking for ways to fix contaminated water, ways to make it cleaner and more efficient here and around the world. When I look at oil spills and wonder why we can't get the oil out of the water, I'm willing to put my money in. I never let go of what I love.

Don't take relationships—or breakfast—for granted.

[After my 1994 divorce] I didn't think I'd fall in love a second time, but I did. And I made as educated a choice as I could about that commitment, and I spend every day trying to make it last. I try to see what's fallen through the cracks and take a load off my wife. I'm good at dishes, and I'm really good with breakfast. Waffles and sausage—you can't go wrong. You have to make the syrup really hot. That's the difference!

Relish time with your kids.

My big holdup the second time [having children] was, "Am I going to be able to give these three what I gave to my older kids?" That was important to me. I have a good life, and my children are living proof. I've certainly been bruised, but being surrounded by love is a really good image to put in the future, because whatever the game has been, that is the finish line. ●

GREY'S ANATOMY'S SARAH DREW

Bringing Home Baby (at Last!)

AFTER A FRIGHTENINGLY EARLY DELIVERY, THE ACTRESS INTRODUCES HER NEW DAUGHTER HANNAH

"She is 100 percent like any other baby now," Drew says.

Introducing
HANNAH MALI ROSE

Born
DEC. 3, 2014

It wasn't exactly a case of life imitating art—but it wasn't far off either. When Grey's Anatomy actress Sarah Drew went into labor nearly four weeks before her due date, she was in disbelief. "There was nothing prepared," the 34-year-old actress says. "The baby stuff was still in boxes in the basement." But even more unnerving was that her character on the hit ABC show, Dr. April Kepner, was going through pregnancy complications of her own. "It was coinciding with this crazy storyline that I was playing," Drew says. After Hannah Mali Rose was born, the infant went straight to the neonatal intensive-care unit with a lung infection. "It was the worst," says Drew, also a mom to son Micah, 3, with religious-studies-lecturer husband Peter Lanfer. "It's heartbreaking to be discharged without your baby." But her fictional experience also gave her strength through the 11-day ordeal. "The fact that I had just played a story about having a baby with complications emotionally prepared me for the scary situation I was in," she says. And now that their adorable redheaded "early bird" (whose middle name is for the red Mali fire-finch bird) is home, the family is adjusting to life as a foursome. "It's wonderful," she says. "But I haven't had a date with my husband in months. I'm hoping to make a shift soon in that department." –EMILY STROHM

"I was beside myself," Drew says of learning Hannah would have to spend time in the NICU.

"I'm a very happy guy," says Grey (with his Yorkie), who took this self-portrait at home on Dec. 19. Right: Grey in Cabaret in 1966.

BROADWAY LEGEND JOEL GREY

AT 82, THE CABARET ICON REFLECTS ON HIS REMARKABLE RISE TO FAME—AND OPENS UP ABOUT HIS SEXUALITY FOR THE FIRST TIME

By ELIZABETH McNEIL

THE ENTERTAINER "When I first saw the movie, I realized we'd made magic together," says Minnelli (with Grey in Cabaret in 1972). "It was tops working with him." Above: a young Grey as the wolf in Grandmother Slyboots at the Cleveland Playhouse ca. 1945.

Even now, more than 70 years later, Joel Grey remembers hearing the grown-ups talk in the next room of his childhood home in Cleveland. "They were talking derisively about 'fairies,' and men being dragged off to jail and, even worse, for being homosexual, for being who they were," he says. Then 9 years old, "I remember knowing I wanted to make a family and to be an actor, but I'd come to realize, along with being attracted to girls, I had similar feelings for boys," says Grey. He kept those feelings to himself for many years to come. "I struggled mightily not to be that person, which would make my dreams an impossibility."

Grey's childhood dreams did come true. He created a sensation with his mesmerizing stage and screen turns as the Master of Ceremonies in Cabaret. And for 24 years—which he calls "the happiest of my life"—he was married to actress Jo Wilder, with whom he had two kids, actress Jennifer Grey and James, a chef. Then came change, political and personal. "I slowly came to embrace that other part of who I always was," says Grey, 82. Now, after an extraordinary seven-decade career, he's coming forward in his own way and without fanfare. "All the people close to me have known for years who I am," he says. Yet it wasn't like that at the height of his fame. As a man of that generation, he notes, "you couldn't have a life, a career then.... It was too dangerous in my world, my house, my family. You just had to put it out of your mind. If you could." He pauses. "It's not like that now."

'I slowly came to embrace that other part of who I always was'

And so, in a series of talks over espresso in his Manhattan loft and walks with his Yorkie Miguelito along the Hudson River, the spry and spirited Grey reflects on his journey from vaudeville kid to Broadway legend to Oscar winner, opening up in a way he never has before. "I don't like labels, but if you have to put a label on it, I'm a gay man," he says. "[Sexuality] doesn't matter anymore. Neil Patrick Harris is a star in every way. And he's a dad. He's the most gifted, charming, talented actor, who is himself and that's it. There are no limits."

It wasn't that way for young Joel Katz, who idolized his father, Yiddish comedian Mickey Katz, but had a more troubled relationship with his overbearing mother, Grace, a self-absorbed beauty who, he says, "was a little too Mama Rose." Looking for escape, he started playing children's roles in the theater, "my first home." "They called me Mr. Katz," he recalls. "At 9 years old, I had respect! And it became my life."

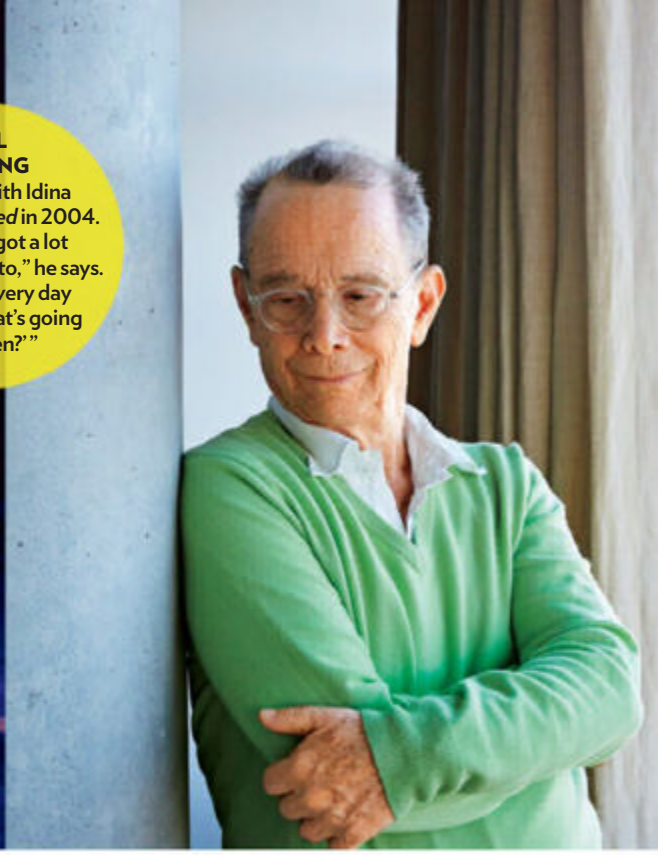

At 16 he joined his father's Borscht Capades comedy revue. Not by choice. "I wasn't a nightclub comic," he says. "I was a success, but I hated it. My plan was to be Laurence Olivier." He sang and danced for Lana Turner (who invited him over for champagne) and performed with Nat King Cole and Judy Garland. Still, he felt trapped. "I was unable to get a job [as an actor]," he recalls, "and I was ready to quit." That's when he got a phone call in 1966 from Broadway director Hal Prince with the offer to star in Cabaret onstage.

The role "had no words, just songs," Grey says. "There were no instructions how to play him." With slicked-back hair, mascara-caked eyelashes and a lipstick sneer, he made the role his and won a Tony in 1966. "The moment he careened on the stage, you couldn't take your eyes off of him," recalls Prince. "It was risky, but you knew something important was happening." Grey thought the character "should be seductive in the way Hitler was. Saying, 'Come, there will be bread on every table.' That's what Hitler said, and he fooled them—and so did the emcee. As a Jew, that was important to me. It was my personal statement to get people to look and say, 'My God, what did we let happen?' "

When the play was made into a movie in 1972, Grey and his costar Liza Minnelli won Oscars. "I was sure Al Pacino would win for The Godfather," says Grey, who didn't prepare a speech. His next-door neighbor Larry Hagman, afraid he'd come home empty-handed, left a huge trophy at his door: "To Joel, for the Best F------ Neighbor Award."

Grey says he never felt limited by his signature role. He starred in musicals including Chicago and Wicked, appeared in more than a dozen movies and serenaded Kermit on The Muppet Show. He performed for Presidents and princesses. Grace of Monaco "threw roses at my feet," he recalls. "Then she invited me back to the palace, and we talked about raising teenagers."

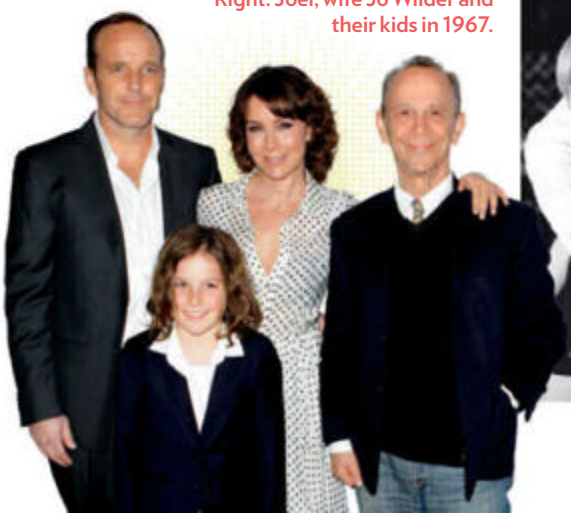

Once their children moved out, Grey and Wilder decided to divorce. "It was that time where people were leaving their spouses, thinking, 'You can have it all,'" notes Grey. "And we agreed." He says he wasn't unhappy in his marriage or living a double life. "I fell in love with a wonderful woman, crazy in love," says Grey. "And I always wanted to have children. I loved being married, but nothing is forever."

He remains close to his children. "I'm happy that my dad has come to a point in his life where he feels safe to declare himself in a public way as a gay man," says Dirty Dancing star Jennifer, 54. "The more people are free to own their true nature and can come closer to love and accept themselves as they truly are, no matter what age, to finally be free of the lies or half-truths, it is freedom."

A turning point for Grey came in 1985, when he played the lead in Larry Kramer's groundbreaking play about the AIDS crisis, The Normal Heart. "You could hear sobbing during the performance," he says. "And everybody was still so afraid, not drinking from each other's glasses at dinner parties, thinking you could catch it." Playing a bold activist was "transformative," he says. "I felt a kind of freedom. The childhood fears were replaced with real-life experience. I found more ease, less questioning."

In recent years Grey has found new passion as a photographer (his fifth book of photos comes out later this year, as well as a memoir) and has won a new generation of fans, thanks to guest-star turns on shows such as Grey's Anatomy and Buffy the Vampire Slayer. "Teenage girls stop me on the street," he marvels. He's had "a few" relationships, he says, but he's now "happy to be single." But "it's not over," he adds with a smile. "I still look at the vows section of the New York Times. One is always ready for surprises." ●

Jennifer Grey (below, with her husband, Clark Gregg, daughter Stella and Joel in 2011) says her dad's career taught her "magic was possible. It pretty much ruined any chance I had of getting a regular 9-to-5 job." Right: Joel, wife Jo Wilder and their kids in 1967.

VIVICA A. FOX

WHAT I EAT IN A DAY

The 5'7" Celebrity Apprentice contestant keeps her body lean—and her mind ready for the boardroom—by filling up on protein, veggies, fruit and a daily glass of red wine (cheers to that!)

HYDRATION
Water (2.5 liters!) with mint leaves throughout the day, as well as green tea

BREAKFAST
½ cup cooked oatmeal with ½ cup organic blueberries and 1 tbsp. soft margarine, plus 1 small organic pink grapefruit

SNACKS
(at least two a day)
1 small red apple
⅓ cup raw unsalted almonds

LUNCH
5 oz. piece of grilled halibut, plus a small mixed green salad (kale, romaine lettuce, orange bell peppers, avocado, sliced carrots, cherry tomatoes and walnuts) with 2 tbsp. balsamic pear vinaigrette on the side (she just dips her fork in)

DINNER
5 oz. lemon-rosemary lean turkey meatballs, plus 1 cup lightly steamed mixed vegetables, ½ cup steamed brown rice—and a glass of Pinot Noir

TOTAL CALORIES: 1,586

THE VERDICT
"She is eating real food—nothing is highly processed—and she is doing a great job eating snacks and consuming water throughout the day," says dietitian Keri Glassman of NutritiousLife.com. "With her breakfast, I'd prefer real grass-fed butter or coconut oil instead of margarine, which is processed with artificial ingredients. As for the glass of wine every day, it's a conscious indulgence—she's not overdoing it. In fact, one drink of alcohol a day for women has been linked to lowering the risk of heart disease."

HER FOOD PHILOSOPHY
"I make sure to have three meals a day with snacks in between," says Fox, 50, who also stays svelte with water aerobics. Her advice on smart eating? "In the morning, plan your daily food menu."

TEAM VIVICA! Fox (with Donald Trump) is vying for an Apprentice win.

Roast Chicken with Root Vegetables

The host and judge of Bravo's Best New Restaurant creates a comforting one-pot meal

Tom Colicchio

- 2 tbsp. canola oil
- 1 whole chicken (3 lbs.), trussed
- 1 tbsp. kosher salt
- ½ tbsp. freshly ground black pepper
- 3 sprigs fresh rosemary
- 3 sprigs fresh thyme
- 6 small carrots, peeled
- 12 baby turnips, peeled
- 6 small shallots, peeled
- 6 fingerling potatoes, halved
- 3 cloves garlic, peeled
- 2 tbsp. butter

1. Preheat oven to 375°. In an ovenproof roasting pan, heat the canola oil over medium heat. Season the bird inside and out with salt and pepper, and stuff the cavity with the rosemary and thyme. Brown the chicken in the pan on both sides and the breast for 3 to 4 minutes each side. 2. Turn the chicken breast-side up and place in the oven. Roast for 25 minutes, then add the vegetables and garlic cloves to the pan surrounding the bird. Add the butter and return to the oven. 3. Cook for an additional 20 to 25 minutes (until the chicken is golden brown and cooked through), turning vegetables once while cooking. Remove the pan from the oven and cover loosely with foil. Let the chicken rest for 10 minutes before carving and serving.

Serves: 4 Prep Time: 15 minutes

Not all Alfredos are created equal.

We start with fresh cream and butter, then add fresh Ricotta.
Next, we blend in aged Parmesan, Romano and Asiago cheeses.
All for a clearly authentic Alfredo.

One Last Thing

Busy Philipps

The Cougar Town star, 35, also directs the Feb. 3 episode of the series' final season on TBS

Last time I danced
I took the girls [daughters Birdie, 6, and Cricket, 1] to see my parents in Phoenix, and we went to see ZooLights [holiday light show]. They played music and we got down. Cricket is just learning how to move, so it's very cute.

Last time I heard 'I love you'
Well, my husband [Marc Silverstein] told me today. We kind of always say it when we get off the phone. We try to every time; it depends on how annoyed we are [laughs].

Last time I was recognized
It happened a lot in Phoenix. Some people will say things like, "You look just like that actress," but they don't know who I am. I don't want to play a guessing game because then it's like me listing my IMDB page, and that's just awkward.

Last time I cried
Cougar Town just ended, so I've been crying for like three weeks. There were a lot of tears during the last night of shooting. And then we had some tequila and martinis and wine, and we were okay.

Last time I was anxious
I'm anxious and embarrassed all the time. That is like my constant state of being. I walk into walls or fall down stairs or fall on my face at movie premieres. I'm like the not-cool, older-lady version of Jennifer Lawrence.
